

As a frequent airline traveler, I am AGAINST allowing cell phone use aboard airborne aircraft. The reason is not interference--there are fixes to that--but rather that there will be interminable and loud jabbering by inconsiderate boors and varied loudmouths next to us in flight and we will not be able to get any work done or to rest--two things that are vital to business travelers and that are the only saving grace for long and crowded flights. The noise level will become untenable. In fact it will take us back to the "bad old days" when unwanted and unstoppable smoke pollution made flights unpleasant, if not unbearable. The few should not be able to annoy the many at will.

Thank you,
